

Session 6

The claim and rebuttal

What is a claim and rebuttal?

- The side you disagree with should be refuted.

Some other people, however, believe that the zoos are perfect places for breeding rare animals. The existence of such zoos can help protect the preservation of the animals which are on the verge of extinction. However, I believe this protestation can be given in nature as well without putting the poor animal in a small cage. So zoos are not really necessary for that reason.

Using better logic to refute the argument

Some other people, on the other hand, believe that the zoos are perfect places for breeding rare animals. The existence of such zoos can help protect the preservation of the animals which are on the verge of extinction. However, I believe this protection can be given in nature as well without putting the poor animal in a small cage. The government can make small buildings in jungles where the animals breed and mate. The vets and forest rangers can stay in those small buildings to provide protection and medical care for those animals. So, zoos are not really necessary for that reason.

- Some other people however, believe that the zoos are perfect places for breeding rare animals. The existence of such zoos can help protect the preservation of the animals which are on the verge of extinction. However, this opinion is wrong because it hurts the animal.
- However, I think this is a pity.
- However, this is wrong.
